

Central Service May End Broker's Paper Work Woes

By REYNOLDS KNIGHT

One gift package that Santa did not leave under the tree was a cure for the chronic headache of the Wall Street broker—back-office paper work.

The problem became so oppressive last August that the securities industry resorted to nine abbreviated stock exchange sessions, something that commission-gear brokers do only in near desperation.

One important plus development in coping with the paper-work jam involves a start-up in the long delayed Central Certificate Service (CCS) by the New York Stock Exchange.

This constitutes a computerized system that may eliminate up to 75 per cent of the physical handling of stock certificates by exchange member firms. Full-scale activation of CCS may become a reality early in 1968.

"Should Big Board volume, recently running around 11 million shares a day, jump up to a sustained rate of 15 million shares or more," one broker declared, "we could border on crisis." A somber thought for the holiday season, to say the least.

THE PRESIDENT of one of the nation's leading industrial concerns has urged that government and industry work together to eliminate what he termed "the 10-mile gap" between the unemployed of the ghetto and available jobs in industry.

In an address at the recent 43rd annual New England Conference in Boston, Stephen F. Keating of Honeywell, Inc., said the 10-mile gap was geographical in that "the people who need work are at the city's center—the plants are in the suburbs."

He added that the distance between plant and tenement was also psychological, symbolizing the "wide cultural gap between the ghetto environment and the industrial environment."

KEATING, who heads an automation company that employs 50,000 persons in the United States, told the conference that "individual companies can speed the assimilation of hard-core unemployed, through specially designed recruiting programs. Such programs should offer meaningful jobs—not just menial jobs—to the disadvantaged.

"It must be recognized," Keating said, "that you can't give jobs to people. You can only give work to slaves or prisoners—free men must be motivated to want work. You can't stop rioting and looting by giving people work any more than by giving them welfare. Both separate the recipient from the rest of society, whereas the long-term solution lies in bringing them into society."

The Honeywell executive concluded that industry "seeks the opportunity to become a partner in the search for answers to our urban problems."

THE CHRISTMAS gift certificate that seems destined to take holiday honors was the one offered by one of the "finer" salons in New York City.

The recipient was entitled to a $2,000 coiffure wardrobe that included two full wigs, one short fall, one long fall, evening curls, pin curls, bangs, two sideburns, one pair of eyelashes, 12 streaks and a hair band, all personally created. A gold and white traveling case with individual compartments for each piece also was part of the package.

The U. S. cornbelt has been let out several notches to include many acres beyond the traditional Midwest production area.

In total production 11 Central states still dominate, but, according to Cargill, Inc., Minneapolis-based international farm products firm, that supremacy was challenged this year.

Total U. S. corn production hit a record 4.7 billion bushels, some 600 million bushels above last year. Illinois alone produced 1.1 billion bushels and accounted for almost half of the total increase but in the 10 remaining cornbelt states the figures were less dramatic.

FIVE OF the ten, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska, showed a drop in bushel production from last year. In seven cornbelt states average yields dipped while the national per acre average rose to nearly 76 bushels, according to Cargill, a major producer of corn seed.

Pennsylvania led the non-cornbelt states. Its harvest was 154 per cent above last year. Pennsylvania contributed more than 8 per cent of the total U. S. increase.

North Carolina, deep in the tobacco belt, improved production by 86 per cent this year, accounting for almost 9 per cent of the total increase. Maryland stretched its output for a 124 per cent increase and raised average yields from 44 to 88 bushels per acre.

Georgia's production climbed by 43 per cent; Kentucky, nearly 83 per cent.

In all, six non-cornbelt states contributed 33.5 per cent of the 600-million-bushel U. S. increase.
